Mission, vision, values, and goals

During my life I've had the privilege of being surrounded by great people that have always supported me throughout my journey through life, from a great family and parents that have supported me financially and emotionally, to great teachers that have taught me a variety of things, to friends that have helped me as well through life. It is because of all of the amazing people that have helped me through life that I wish to be able to contribute to the world just as much as the world has helped me, and I believe that the first step in being able to do that is by being able to help myself just as much as others have helped me.

I dream of being able to sustain myself so that my family can have an easier life, if there is one goal that I want to achieve within the next 5 years is being financially independent from my family, to be able to practice self-sufficiency and charity just like my family has done to me. I see myself in five years having a data science job like ecoATM, biolegacy research, amity foundation, or many of the other data jobs you can find with a quick google search probably in an office or potentially remote, renting out an apartment in an affordable part of California or Arizona, taking some occasional off time to see my family back in Mexico. I envision myself sending a portion of my income back to my family so they can be better off financially. If my vision is complete by these five years, I would have already gotten my bachelor's degree in computer science and have enough time with minimum wage jobs to pad out my resume.

- Goals:
    1. Obtain a bachelor's degree in computer science
    2. Get a data science job or any desk job
    3. Obtain enough money to partially support family

I am currently practicing self sufficiency by taking on a part-time job while attending college to try alleviate a portion of my parents' financial burdens, I also practiced charity by volunteering at Feeding San Diego over the summer. All of these things that I've done and I am currently doing, trying to earn money and majoring in computer science, is all to work towards the goal of becoming, at the very least, a functioning member of society that doesn't rely on the help of others and can at least partially help others with their burdens.
